The New York Bulletin, of Monday, reported: "There has continued to prevail a considerable amount of activity on the speculative market and more or less excitement, with the tone favoring operators for a rise and values-once again making an advance. The diminishing supply as shown from all points, and the daily drawing together of remaining aggregates, through which owners perfect the control of the situation, forms the principal element through which the buoyancy is obtained; but the market was much assisted on the downward turn to-day by the bester accounts from Liverpool. The 'shorts' here were certainly very much inclined to cover, and their demands, developing in much larger form than had been thought."
